Fighting The Underhanded War

It looks as if the United States and the West have suffered another setback in the Asian cold war.

Americans learned long ago to view with considerable suspicion such "neutralist" attitudes as now have taken the upper hand in Laos. The new political leaders in that tiny nation say they will be neutral in the East-West power play, but in the same breath declare that the neutralist policy will be implemented by such actions as the expulsion of French and U.S. military advisers and an end to the war against the pro-Communist Pathet Lao guerrillas.

Yet the blame cannot be placed entirely on the shoulders of the seemingly ungrateful Laotians, whose support of the rebel leaders provided the pressure that replaced prowesternism with neutralism. Some of the blame may justly belong to the United States approach to foreign aid.

For instance, two other "platform planks" of the reformers are general ones that hold strong attraction for the rank-and-file Asian. They promise to seek aid from any nation that will grant it without strings and to clean up government corruption.

IT IS NO SECRET that American aid, however well intended, has sometimes found its way into private political pockets. Whether that was true in Laos we do not know, but the fact that most U.S. aid to Laos went for the support of the royal army makes it

When such corruption does occur, it is only natural that the rank-and-file are ripe for Communist charges that the United States is primarily interested in financing the power of the rich and the corrupt.

An example of how this sort of thing can be averted is South Korea, where President Eisenhower stepped in and put pressure on the corrupt government of Syngman Rhee to help wipe out the internal scandal by stepping down. After the dust had cleared, Mr. Eisenhower was able to visit South Korea to the acclaim of its citizens.

It is likewise no secret to informed people throughout the world that the Communists are past masters at attaching strings to any help they give to other nations. But most man-in-the-street Asians are not informed, and therefore are ripe for propaganda which paints the Communists as selfless servants of the underprivileged and Americans as selfish servants of the rich and powerful.

PERHAPS WHAT is needed is a reshaping of our foreign aid program to emphasize education more strongly. Education is the tactic used to such advantage by the Communists. But it is not education in the formal, organized sense. It is education in the sense of reaching the man in the street and teaching him what you want him to know.

If Americans were to do this, they would have the advantage of being able to present the facts. They could inform the man-in-thestreet Asian of the strings attached to Kremlin aid and the kind of cleanup the Communists have in mind when they talk about reforming government

Americans, however, have an aversion to underhanded, behind-the-scenes maneuvers. They become a bit horrified themselves when they learn their government has been sending spy planes over Russian territory.

But it is with underhandedness that the Reds have been able to call so many of the shots in the cold war.

IF THE UNITED STATES has sometimes spent billions in foreign aid to no ultimate avail, it is not because the expenditure of the aid is wrong but because the aid has been expended in the wrong manner.

Americans must swallow some of their pride in the open-and-above-board approach and resort to fighting fire with fire. On equal ground with equal strategy, freedom will win out over communism every

Whatever chance the Belgian Congo has of using its freedom for something better than a civil war that might never end rests in the ability of Dag Hammarskjold and Ralph Bunche to settle the political differences that have flared into violence the last six weeks.

What About This Spy Setup, Mr. K?

By Victor Riesel

PARIS -A few hours after I left the sleek Trans World Airlines jet liner at Orly Field, I was in the high-ceilinged, marble - floored, guarded apart-

Those dos-Victor Riesel siers had what I sought-the details of the espionage, sabotage and terror apparatus of the KGB, the agency which has indicted U2 pilot Francis Powers in Moscow.

Not far from here Chairman Khrushchev quivered at the nostrils in mid-May over our lone spy. But all the time he was receiving reports from a huge KGB espionage center. It is in Saint Antonius Hospital in the Soviet Berlin-Karlshorst restricted Officially it is known as the KGB Residentura. It is second only to the supreme spy center in Moscow. It dwarfs the combined espionage manpower of the entire

In the Karlshorst restricted area, the KGB has some 600 buildings and separate offices suites. These are manned by 900 permanent specialists in everything from forging of U.S. documents to contact with the underworlds of Europe for terror as-

THIS ESPIONAGE general staff also "has an organization of several thousands, including field workers, agents, informers, couriers and other liaison personnel.'

Compare this with the simple 'overflight' spying of Francis Powers who wouldn't have put the flame to a Russian candle if it meant harming anyone.

Look, as I did, at the makeup of the KBG's sabotage-espionage unit at Karlshorst called "The Dept. of Illegal Acticity."

Operating out of the Residentura, it "exercises functions which include support to front and other underground organizations in the West and the training of these organizations for the execution of terror and sabotage action." There is in this spy warren-

Which Minority Party?

By Raymond Moley

We are already getting, in dispatches and commentaries from Washington, D.C., and New York, two assertions which need contradiction or qualification before read-

One is that the Republican party is a minority and the other is that a Republican candidate must direct his appeal primarily toward "Democrats and Independents" in order to win.

These are, at the best, those dangerous half-truths which can lose rather than win the election for a Republican candidate. And they have in the past 20 years lost three elections - one for Willkie, and two for Dewey.

It was recently asserted in a number of dispatches that the Republican national headquarters in Washington had issued a statement that Democrats outnumber Republicans 3-2.

To make that statement is good campaign strategy. Technically it is true, especially when it is based upon the disastrous year 1958. It is intended to spur local organizations to greater efforts.

BUT THE WISE MAN who was from 1952 to 1959 campaign director of the Republican National pointed out the danger of accepting this sort of estimate without adding certain facts.

He said that it is true that generally the total vote for Democratic candidates for the House of Representatives in higher than that cast for Republican candidates. But there are from 70 to 80 districts, mostly in the South, in which there is no Republican opposition. Also, where there is opposition, it is only nominal.

Humphreys proved that if these districts were eliminated, the Republican vote would be considerably higher than the Democratic vote. There are also gerrymandered districts everywhere in the states outside the South in which opposition is only nominal. Some of these ae Republican; others, Democratic.

Moreover, in the past five presidential elections there are strong citizens' organizations working only for the presidential candidate on the Republican ticket. "Citizens for Willkie" was an example.

That sort of appeal is a direct invitation to split the ticket. Because of it, candidates for Congress and the state legislatures are party names.

is nothing but the name Democrat to relate most of the congressmen from uncontested districts in the South to the majority that wrote the platform and selected the candidate at Los Angeles. Nixon's appeal to those conservative voters will be very strong indeed, and the result will be apparent in the election. Another circumstance which gives the Democratic party a technical majority is in the registration figures. These are meaningless in terms of real preferences. This is especially true of the three states I have visited during the past three weeks-California.

Oregon, and Washington. Party ties are very loose out here. People register according to their past traditions or by habit. But in the elections in all three states, Republican governors have been generally elected over the past 20 years.

The important fact which needs clarification by the candidates this year is that the Democratic party has been transformed since Roosevelt was first elected 28 years ago. It stands for the exact opposite from what it advocated before that. The whole voting population is now in a state of flux, seeking new moorings and new party affilations.

If, as is probable, Nixon proves wiser than Dewey, and Willkie, he will seek to align with his party the millions who cannot subscribe to the radical sentiments dominant at Los Angeles. With that sort of appeal, with his firm belief in building up the strength of his party at the lcoal level, we may see a real realignment of the two parties, with either fairly equal strength or a Republican majority. But to assume that all Democrats are radical and to make a radical appeal would lose conservatives, under both

Fighting The Underhanded War

It looks as if the United States and the West have suffered another setback in the Asian cold war

Americans learned long ago to view with considerable suspicion such "neutralist" attitudes as now have taken the upper hand in Laos. The new political leaders in that tiny nation say they will be neutral in the East-West power play, but in the same breath declare that the neutralist policy will be implemented by such actions as the expulsion of French and U.S. military advisers and an end to the war against the pro-Communist Pathet Lao guerrillas.

Yet the blame cannot be placed entirely on the shoulders of the seemingly ungrateful Laotians, whose support of the rebel leaders provided the pressure that replaced prowesternism with neutralism. Some of the blame may justly belong to the United States approach to foreign aid.

For instance, two other "platform planks" of the reformers are general ones that hold strong attraction for the rank-and-file Asian. They promise to seek aid from any nation that will grant it without strings and to clean up government corruption.

IT IS NO SECRET that American aid, however well intended, has sometimes found its way into private political pockets. Whether that was true in Laos we do not know, but the fact that most U.S. aid to Laos went for the support of the royal army makes it possible.

When such corruption does occur, it is only natural that the rank-and-file are ripe for Communist charges that the United States is primarily interested in financing the power of the rich and the corrupt.

An example of how this sort of thing can be averted is South Korea, where President Eisenhower stepped in and put pressure on the corrupt government of Syngman Rhee to help wipe out the internal scandal by stepping down. After the dust had cleared, Mr. Eisenhower was able to visit South Korea to the acclaim of its citizens.

It is likewise no secret to informed people throughout the world that the Communists are past masters at attaching strings to any help they give to other nations. But most man-in-the-street Asians are not informed, and therefore are ripe for propaganda which paints the Communists as selfless servants of the underprivileged and Americans as selfish servants of the rich and powerful.

PERHAPS WHAT is needed is a reshaping of our foreign aid program to emphasize education more strongly. Education is the tactic used to such advantage by the Communists. But it is not education in the formal. organized sense. It is education in the sense of reaching the man in the street and teaching him what you want him to know.

If Americans were to do this, they would have the advantage of being able to present the facts. They could inform the man-in-thestreet Asian of the strings attached to Kremlin aid and the kind of cleanup the Communists have in mind when they talk about reforming government.

Americans, however, have an aversion to underhanded, behind-the-scenes maneuvers. They become a bit horrified themselves when they learn their government has been sending spy planes over Russian territory. But it is with underhandedness that the Reds have been able to call so many of the shots in the cold war.

IF THE UNITED STATES has sometimes spent billions in foreign aid to no ultimate avail, it is not because the expenditure of the aid is wrong but because the aid has been expended in the wrong manner.

Americans must swallow some of their pride in the open-and-above-board approach and resort to fighting fire with fire.

On equal ground with equal strategy, freedom will win out over communism every

Whatever chance the Belgian Congo has of using its freedom for something better than a civil war that might never end rests in the ability of Dag Hammarskjold and Ralph Bunche to settle the political differences that have flared into violence the last six weeks.

The secretary-general of the United Nations and his chief trouble-shooter are the foremost practitioners of the world's newest profession-international negotiator.

There have been statesmen, diplomats and militarists. There have been special envoys, confidential agents and heads of secret missions. There have been experts in stirring up sedition, treason, revolution, bloodshed, strategems, plots, intrigues and turmoil. But never before have there been men who have risen deliberately above nationalism to act as international negotiators between divergent elements itching to fight it out. Their only counterparts are the few men to be found in civilized countries who find personal satisfaction in showing where areas of agreement existed, for the benefit of those trapped in areas of disagreement. In the United States, for example, violence and suffering have been averted by skilled negotiators with the patience to stand between spokesmen for labor and management. No one knows what the Hammarskjold-Bunche formula is. No one knows the exact nature of the team play by which they are trying to save the Congolese from the tragedy of violence and by which they calmed violence in Israel.

Less is known about them that is known about the merest crooner or the rookiest ballplayer. They wear no uniforms. Even their titles are vague. But it cannot be doubted that they are pioneering in an unexplored area of human relations-the settlement by logic and good will of international disputes that in the past were signs for prolonged

Liberal With Money

One impression left by the Democrats' runaround of a civil rights proposal in their tagend session is deep enough to hurt.

Democrats talk endless about how much more liberal they are than Republicans. They have been talking like this since they discovered liberality in the '30s.

The kind of liberality they discovered concerned the political advantage of being liberal with other people's money. As for being liberal with other people's inalienable rights, the Democratic party has misgivings. It has reached a point where it must gloss over Jefferson's teachings about the peril of over-centralization and Wilson's Mortimer Topblower questions the British insurance companies' decision that women drivers are safer drivers than men. "It just seems so because men drivers, completely terrorized by the gals, get as far off the road as possible and allow them more room, he declares.

The Once Over

"The female of the species is a bigger threat than man at the wheel. The frightening fact is that women, especially the younger ones, ignore white lines, brush off rules and defy the courtesy codes with a nonchalance and buoyancy seldom exhibited by men. Their motto is 'Woman's place is in the middle of the road."

All traditional feminine timidity and courtesy is out. She can now out-glare, outmutter and out-defy the male sex and this summer is proving that she drives with an arrogant cry of "Gangway for women drivers, yes; for men drivers, no!" he insists. "More autos are being driven into telegraph poles by Mothers' Club members than ever before," he shouted. "Garden Clubs, Girls Friendly Societies and Ladies Aid Associations are a major source of calls for two cars and wrecking crews. Woman is the hostess with the mostest on the accelerator," Mortimer went on. "It's easier for a gal to be a highway threat to life and limb. She has the charm, the smile and the gaiety that gives her the edge in all displays of highway arrogance. She knows that after the collision no man will do as well with the cop as she does. No male can put on the same expression of injured innocence as he crawls out of the wreckage.

"Those British insurance men are nuts. Women drive more slowly than men only once they have flat tires, carburetor trouble or slipping clutches. American insurance companies go for no such nonsense. They know that women are in fewer accidents because there are less than half as many on the road as male drivers and that in the last few years all sensible men make way

Which Minority Party?

By Raymond Moley

We are already getting, in dispatches and commentaries from Washington, D.C., and New York, two assertions which need contradiction or qualification before readers and hearers accept them as

One is that the Republican party is a minority and the other is that a Republican candidate must direct his appeal primarily toward "Democrats and Independents" in order to win. These are, at the best, those dangerous half-truths which can lose rather than win the election for a Republican candidate. And they have in the past 20 years lost three elections - one for Willkie, and two for Dewey.

It was recently asserted in a number of dispatches that the Republican national headquarters in Washington had issued a statement that Democrats outnumber Republicans 3-2.

To make that statement is good campaign strategy. Technically it is true, especially when it is based upon the disastrous year 1958. It is intended to spur local organizations to greater efforts.

BUT THE WISE MAN who was from 1952 to 1959 campaign director of the Republican National pointed out the danger of accepting this sort of estimate without adding certain facts.

He said that it is true that generally the total vote for Democratic candidates for the House of Representatives in higher than that cast for Republican candidates. But there are from 70 to 80 districts, mostly in the South, in which there is no Republican opposition. Also, where there is opposition, it is only nominal.

Humphreys proved that if these districts were eliminated, the Republican vote would be considerably higher than the Democratic vote. There are also gerrymandered districts everywhere in the states outside the South in which opposition is only nominal. Some of these ae Republican; others, Democratic forgotten and their vote slumps below that of the head of the Nixon well knows that danger, and such groups will be more tightly bound to the Republican organization this year. The soundest political strategy is to work hard to get out votes for the little fellows on the ticket first. Then every extra vote gotten out will go to the head of the ticket, IT MUST BE NOTED that there is nothing but the name Democrat to relate most of the congressmen from uncontested districts in the South to the majority that wrote the platform and selected the candidate at Los Angeles.

Moreover, in the past five presidential elections there are strong citizens' organizations working only for the presidential candidate on the Republican ticket. "Citizens for Willkie' was an example.

That sort of appeal is a direct invitation to split the ticket. Because of it, candidates for Congress and the state legislatures are party names.

Nixon's appeal to those conservative voters will be very strong indeed, and the result will be apparent in the election.

Another circumstance which gives the Democratic party a technical majority is in the registration figures. These are meaningless in terms of real preferences.

This is especially true of the three states I have visited during the past three weeks-California, Oregon, and Washington. Party ties are very loose out here. People register according to their past traditions or by habit. But in the elections in all three states, Republican governors have been generally elected over the past 20 years.

The important fact which needs clarification by the candidates this year is that the Democratic party has been transformed since Roosevelt was first elected 28 years ago. It stands for the exact opposite from what it advocated before that. The whole voting population is now in a state of flux, seeking new moorings and new party affilations.

If, as is probable, Nixon proves wiser than Dewey, and Willkie, he will seek to align with his party the millions who cannot subscribe to the radical sentiments dominant at Los Angeles.

With that sort of appeal, with his firm belief in building up the strength of his party at the lcoal level, we may see a real realignment of the two parties, with either fairly equal strength or a Republican majority. But to assume that all Democrats are radical and to make a radical appeal would lose conservatives, under both

An Over-The-Counter Discussion

What will happen now that At- lem or at least to try to diminish its significance. torney General Rogers has obtained a voluntary agreement

The attorney general now says: "It is heartening to know that private initiative and cooperation have been instrumental in assuring equal treatment of all citizens in so many communities in such a comparatively brief time."

One wonders if the key to the voluntary settlements that have been made lies in the fact that legal coercion has not been applied and that the force of reason has been substituted.

Did lunch - counter demonstrations and "sit in's" really accomplish the settlement in the southern communities where the new arrangement is going into effect or was it the potential effects of boycotts in northern branches of the same chain store establishments?

The Department of Justice's policy in abandoning to some extent the realm of coercive law for the loftier realm of "voluntary" action where lunch-counter controversies arise is significant in that it points to the importance of considering various factors in the light of local customs and their effect on the income of businesses.

Belong to your grandchildren, who you always did adore. So rest in your palace of gold, Grandad, Dear, As the heritage you left us helps keep you always near.—Written by Granddaughter, Becky Sue Hopper. Sadly missed by wife, children and grandchildren.

Q. To what do you attribute the show's longevity?

A. I've always felt that the fact that all concerned with the show believe in its simple purpose gives it the quality it has. Our purpose is, first of all, to entertain. Then, to give answers - not pose problems! We want to prove - and hope we do prove - the basic strength, the goodness, really, of people - ALL kinds of people. To that end it is the understanding and caring, as well as the top talents of all concerned, which make "The Loretta Young Show" possible. I'll have to attribute its longevity to that, too. What else could I attribute it to?

Q. How does television fame compare with movie fame?

A. It's more personal. There's a closer, perhaps a more effectionate -even more possessive quality about this friendliness of viewers. And a sort of "member of a a hit-and-run driver. family" quality when they don't like something. They don't keep you guessing - either way!
